

Jean-J Grandville (Nancy 1803 - Vanves 1847)

Et l'affichage fut confié à Pyromane, ex-employé de Bertrand, qui promet à la nouvelle rédaction des colles encore plus fortes que celles de son ex-maître, 1841-1842

Encre brune sur traits de mine de plomb

145 x 200 mm

Cachet sec JJG de la vente de l'atelier Grandville en 1853

Paru en frontispice du second volume de "Scènes de la vie privée et publique des animaux"

Literature:

J.J. Grandville, Scènes de la vie privée et publique des animaux, Paris, Hetzel et Paulin, 1842, vol. II, frontispice

Dr. René Stockman e.a., Een andere wereld / Un autre monde, Gand, Musée Guislain, 2016, p.33 ill.

Artist description:

Starting in the 17th century, the visual element acquires an ever-greater role in the performing arts. The feasts and ballets of the French court set the tone with lavish offerings of magical metamorphoses. Decorators bring movement to the fore, doing away with the symmetrical, frontal perspective, and they develop machines for quick changes of scenery and the appearance/disappearance of actors and accessories. The decorator supplants the author; sound and light, décor and gimmick gain the upper hand. Un autre monde – Grandville's best-known book and for which this drawing was made – testifies to the enormous power of attraction exercised by theatre on the public at that time. Theatre in the 19th century was the most popular form of diversion, like movies were to become in the 1950s and '60s, and with a comparable influence on all aspects of social life. From its very first pages, Un autre monde numbers countless references to theatre or related forms of amusement, in its décors and assemblages of protagonists, in their stances and expressions, in the one deus ex machina after the other. – A persistent, uncomically intended anachronism in the literature concerning Grandville, presents him as a pioneer of dream analysis who delved into the deepest layers of the subconscious mind.